First Edition Details	Kid Icarus (1986): First released on December 19, 1986 in Japan, followed by Europe on February 15, 1987 and North America in July 1987 for the Nintendo Entertainment System (NES)/ Nintendo Famicom (Japan Only). The game was re-released for the Gameboy Advance as part of the "3D Classics" collection. The game was also added to the Nintendo Virtual Console Store, making it available on the Wii in 2007, then on the Wii U and 3DS in 2013. It was also one of the 30 built-in games included in the Nintendo Entertainment System (NES) Classic Edition, released in 2016. A 5-minute demo of the game was also included in Super Smash Bros. Brawl (2008) on the Nintendo Wii. Kid Icarus: Of Myths and Monsters (1991): North America were the first to receive the Nintendo Game Boy game on November 5, 1991, followed by Europe on May 21, 1992. Japan, however, only received this game on February 8, 2012 when it was released worldwide through the 3DS Virtual Console. Due to this, it is often not considered to be part of the series. Kid Icarus: Uprising (2012): The idea for Kid Icarus: Uprising was first thought of after Pit heavily featured in Super Smash Bros. Brawl (2008) for the Nintendo Wii as a playable character. This re-ignited the public's interest in the series as the first part of the single player campaign in Super Smash Bros. Brawl begins with elements from the Kid Icarus series. The Kid Icarus: Uprising game itself was released for the Nintendo 3DS in Japan on March 22, 2012, in North America and Europe on March 23, 2012, and in Australia on March 29, 2012.

Summary

Kid Icarus

The story begins in a land called "Angel Land" where humans and deities live in harmony. Two goddesses rule the land: Palutena, goddess of light and Medusa, goddess of darkness. The goddess of light liked the humans and helped them flourish, but the goddess of darkness hated them, so dried up their crops and turned them into stone. Palutena transformed Medusa into a monster and banished her to the underworld. Once there, Medusa gathered monsters and demons and assembled an army. She decided to overthrow Palutena, and a great war between the two broke out. After winning the war, Medusa imprisoned Palutena in her palace and turned her army to stone. Medusa also stole the three sacred treasures: the mirror shield, the arrows of light and the wings of Pegasus. The monsters took over Angel Land and turned it into a land of Darkness, ruled by Medusa. Palutena used her last strength to summon Pit, the head of Palutena's bodyguards, who had been imprisoned in the underworld. He used his bow and arrow to break free after the guarding of the underworld became weak. He fought his way to the Sky Palace, collecting the sacred treasures, and ultimately defeating Medusa, freeing Palutena and Angel Land from Darkness.

Kid Icarus: Of Myths and Monsters

In Kid Icarus: Of Myths and Monsters the story begins in a similar way to the first Kid Icarus. There is a place called Angel Land, founded by Palutena, where humans and gods lived in harmony. The story then differs as Palutena is told by a "sooth-sawyer" of tragedies that are to come, when the "Orcos" arrives. So, Palutena summons Pit, the leader of the Icarus Army and her personal bodyguard. She tells him about the prophecy and asks for his help, entrusting him with the safety of Angel Land.

Palutena proceeds to explain that in order to defeat the "Orcos", Pit will need the three sacred treasures, however, she deems it necessary to train him first to be able to use the treasures. To do this training, Pit and Palutena decide that it is best for him to first go to the underworld, then, proceed to the overworld and finally come to the Skyworld. Whilst he is away, she places each part of the treasure in a fortress to keep them safe. Pit successfully obtains the treasures and manages to defeat the Orcos, saving Angel Land from destruction.

Kid Icarus: Uprising

In Kid Icarus: Uprising, Medusa returns, 25 years after the last time (Kid Icarus, 1989), and she attempts to destroy Pit, Palutena, and all of humanity. Pit is called to stop Medusa and her underground army, which include enemies from the previous games. However, before he defeats the final boss, Pandora clones Pit, using the mirror of truth, creating a Dark Pit, who is supposed to help Medusa's army but instead turns away from both sides. Due to this, Palutena turns her focus back towards defeating Medusa. Pit proceeds to fight Thanatos, retrieves the key to the underworld and then goes to retrieve the sacred treasures from the space pirates who stole them from the constellations in which they were hidden. After defeating the Kraken and obtaining the treasures, Pit proceeds to fight Medusa. However, after defeating her, Pit realises the real enemy was Hades, ruler of the underworld. Hades tricks humans into believing the wish seed was stolen and this causes a great war to break between humans. Pit begins killing off the underworld army to stop them from harvesting the human souls, however part of humanity is destroyed when Viridi, the goddess of nature, uses a reset bomb because she grew tired of humanity's selfishness. Pit now has to fight Viridi's army, formed by the forces of nature. The fight gets underway, however Viridi soon begins to fight Hades, and this gives Pit a chance to stop the second reset bomb. Pit must now take down both Hades and Viridi to stop chaos. First, he takes down Phosphora, the leader of Viridi's army and as he is about to take down all of Hades' revived commanders once again, mysterious objects appear in the sky. This is when Aurum, an alien species, decide to intervene as this is the best time to destroy Earth and harvest its resources. Hades, Viridi and Pit unite to defeat this new enemy. Pyrrhon, the sun god, joins the fight, however, he soon betrays the team and joins the Aurum. He is defeated but this fight causes Pit to black out, then wake up three years later to find his soul trapped in a ring and Earth in chaos. With the help of Magnus, a human champion he met earlier in the game, Pit finds his body and attempts to make contact with Palutena. However, Viridi answers instead and explains that Palutena has been possessed by Chaos Kin, which has made her evil. With the help of Viridi, Pit retrieves the lighting chariot from the chariot master and uses it to break the force field around Palutena. He finds Palutena and defeats Chaos Kin, however, Chaos Kin takes Palutena's soul away with him into the Chaos Vortex. Pit unites with Dark Pit and together they save Palutena. In the aftermath, Dark Pit gets pushed and falls into the sky. Pit rushes after him but by saving him, he is left in a critical state. Dark Pit proceeds to go to the underworld to save Pit. He brings Pit's body to the revival spring with the help of Palutena. This regenerates Pit's wings to their original state and he equips himself with the three sacred treasures in order to take down Hades, who is still causing chaos. However, Hades destroys the treasures, so Pit is forced to look for a new way to defeat Hades. He meets Dyntos, the god of forge, who creates the Great Sacred Treasure, made of orichalcum. With this new weapon, Pit faces Hades once more and defeats him, with the help of Medusa who had been revived by Hades earlier in the story.

Analysis

The Kid Icarus series was not at the beginning as popular as it is nowadays. Due to issues with its release date coinciding with a game that was more successful at launch, Kid Icarus only became a cult classic much later. It is one of Nintendo's best-known games, with its characters becoming regular participants in other Nintendo multi-verse games, namely the Super Smash Brothers series.

Storyline and Characters

The Kid Icarus games themselves primarily tell the story of Palutena and Medusa, two goddesses at the opposite ends of the good/evil scale, themed as light and darkness. They fight over humanity as one wishes to help them prosper, but the other wishes to see them destroyed.

It is interesting to note that the story of the games very much resembles the tale of Perseus and Medusa. According to Apollodorus (Library 2.38–46) Perseus seeks Medusa's head to bring to Polydectes for the wedding of his daughter, Hippodamia. With the help of Hermes and Athena along the way, Perseus must gather the cap of Hades for invisibility, the "Kibisis", a wallet/bag to put the gorgon's head in, and the winged sandals. Perseus was also given an adamantine sickle, by Hermes, and a shield with the gorgon's face on it to protect him from Medusa's gaze. Later on, in the passage, Apollodorus says that the gorgon's head is then given to Athena who attached the head to her shield. This parallels the main storylines of the Kid Icarus series as Pit, the personal bodyguard of Palutena, is guided by the goddess to retrieve the three sacred treasures in order to fight and defeat Medusa. The three sacred treasures Pit must obtain are: The Mirror Shield, Wings of Pegasus, and the Arrows of Light (or the silver armour in Kid Icarus: Of Myths and Monsters). Also, part of the plot is the story of Athena turning Medusa into a monster. Despite it being for distinct reasons, Palutena turns Medusa into a monster for causing chaos, whereas Athena does so as punishment for activities carried out by Medusa in Athena's temple, according to Ovid (Metamorphoses 4.770-803)

This is the main plot followed in the first two games, whilst the latest game's story is split in two. In the first part you have the main story about Medusa, similar to the other games, but then in the second part, the main story becomes about Hades and other gods/beings which Pit encounters during his journey. Unlike the similarities to Greek mythology in the first part of the game, the second part takes more creative freedom and diverts from its similarities in plot to Greek myths. Nonetheless, it keeps some interesting points for analysis such as the characters which appear in the second part of the game. These are mostly Greek gods, or loosely-based on them.

As mentioned above, Kid Icarus: Uprising has both recurring characters and new characters. As part of the recurring characters, there is Palutena, Medusa, Pit, Twinbellows, Hewdraw, Thanatos, and Pandora. Palutena refers to the goddess Pallas Athena. This can be observed through the similarities in the naming of the character as well as the characters behaviour and actions, as previously discussed.

Medusa, on the other hand, is quite easily identifiable with the Greek mythological gorgon. She is presented as the goddess of darkness who was transformed into a monster by Palutena. Villalobos identifies the fact she is called the goddess of darkness as possibly being associated to the tradition that gorgons live in the West, also known as the world of the dead. Interestingly, Villalobos also points out that when Medusa is assembling an underworld army, this could be compared to the Titanomachy scene present in Hesiod's Theogony (617-736)*. She appears in all games except for Kid Icarus: Of Myths and Monsters, where the main antagonist is "Orcos", possibly the Roman counterpart of Hades.

Pit is portrayed as being the head of Palutena's personal army, and in some games, he is also responsible for the protection of Angel Land. It is, however, interesting to note that despite his actions throughout the game being similar to those of Perseus, Pit is in fact Cupid (or Eros, in Greek Mythology). This can be observed through the fact that in the original, Japanese version, "Pit" is "Pitto" which is the Japanese Katana for Kyupitto, or Cupid. Pit, also throughout the games retrieves hearts and carries with him a bow and arrow, attributes typically used when depicting Cupid in popular culture.

Besides the main characters, the four main bosses are also recurring characters. These, too, are loosely-based on Greek Mythology. The first boss Pit typically encounters is Twinbellows. This character is a giant two-headed dog, who is on fire. He is typically found as Pit leaves the underworld levels. It is unclear however, whether this character is meant to depict Orthrus, the creature guarding the sheep of Cyclops, or Cerberus, the commonly depicted three-headed creature, guarding the gates into the underworld. Given the circumstances, however, it is more likely that this is Cerberus, as Twinbellows is found in the underworld.

The next boss enemy Pit encounters is the Hewdraw. As the name suggests, this enemy is based on the Lernaean Hydra. This can be observed as the body of the Hewdraw resembles that of a snake, however, in this version, Hewdraw has only one head (or three heads in Kid Icarus: Uprising), unlike the typical depictions of the hydra which can vary between 9 and 50 heads. He is said to be the gatekeeper of the Overworld.

The Third Boss Pit encounters is Pandora. She first appears as a soul but later in Kid Icarus: Uprising, she recovers her body, turning into Amazon Pandora (or Woman Warrior Pandora in the Japanese version). She is the gatekeeper of the Skyworld and appears as Pit is making his way to the Sky Palace. As the name suggests, this character is based on Pandora, from the Greek myth of Pandora's box (Hesiod Works and Days 60-105), and as such, one of the targets of the attacks is Pandora's box.

Finally, the last boss Pit encounters is Thanatos, which as the name indicates, is based on the Greek god of death. He appears when Pit fights Medusa, in the first two games, as one of the snakes from Medusa's hair. In Kid Icarus: Uprising, Thanatos is one of Medusa's generals, but in this, he resembles a genie. He can also shapeshift in the latter part of the game.

Besides the recurring bosses throughout the series, Kid Icarus: Uprising introduces some other deities and mythical beasts. After defeating Medusa, Pit encounters Hades, the god of the underworld. Hades in the game is a sarcastic character, who constantly tricks Palutena and Pit. He may also be linked to the "Orcos" who appears in Kid Icarus: Of Myths and Monsters, as discussed above.

Another god Kid Icarus: Uprising introduces is "Viridi". She is the goddess of nature and all living things. She is clearly a version of the mythical "Mother Nature" and as such, one of the main interpretations is that she corresponds to Gaia, the Earth Goddess.

Some of the other gods, which are less prominent but also interesting to note are:

- Poseidon, who appears as Poseidon in the game;
- Pyrrhon, who is the god of the sun. He is often interpreted as corresponding to Helios;
- Dynto, the god of forge. He very clearly represents Hephaestus.
- Phosphora, whilst she is not a goddess, she may represent Phosphorus, the light-bringer. Her Japanese name is Eleka, which could correspond to Electra, a nymph whose name means ‘the bright one’.

- Galatic Fiend Kraken. This monster, found in the space pirates level, may be associated with the Ketos. This is not only because Ketos is a known sea-monster in Greek Mythology, but also, this Kraken is found in the constellations, when Pit must go search for the sacred treasures in the Space Pirates’ ship. This could link the two, as in the original Greek Myth, Ketos was placed amongst the constellations. Furthermore, its Japanese name, meaning Star Beast Kraken, may also further support this conclusion. If this is so, it is also interesting to note that in one of its myths, Ketos Aithiopios is defeated by Perseus, further emphasizing this hero’s involvement in the game.

Art style and music

Regarding its art style, the game focuses its art as being modern day, platformer style game with some classical columns in the background, for the first two games.

For Kid Icarus: Uprising, it is a mixture of themes, each very unique to the level and story. The main theme is a castle-like background with ruins, however, the first level provides an end-of-level fight in a colosseum. Angel Land itself, where the main story occurs may allude to the Judeo-Christian tradition of angels (as is the description of Pit himself, as being an Angel who cannot fly). The Skyworld also has some interesting details. It is clearly representing Olympus due to its physical location. It is made up of temples, fountains and paradisiac themes.

Finally, Villalobos, points out something quite interesting about the game*. In the last sections of the first two games, Pit goes through a kind of maze just before encountering the bosses. This could be in reference to the story of Daedalus and Icarus, when they are in the maze of Minos. (Apollodorus Epitome E.1.12-14). Kid Icarus: Uprising also plays with the myth throughout the game, where Pit often mentions his power of flight and in the tutorial, he questions the title of the game. Additionally, at the end of the Kid Icarus: Of Myths and Monsters, Pit flies too close to the sun after defeating “Orcos”.
